RAMPS IN THE GOOD OLD DAYS

“Feast of the Ramson” was derived from a private meal, attended by thirteen ramp lovers. At this small gathering, the men decided to “go public” the following year.”

There was much hoopla connected to that initial ramp feed. Only men were invited, and each man had to have a letter of permission to attend, submitted by his next of kin that absolved the newly formed “National Ramp Society” of liability.

Off to CCC Camp Cranberry they went to hear orations and tall tales. True mountain food was cooked over an open campfire. There was wild game of every variety, and side dishes of homegrown vegetables. It was reported moonshine was the drink of choice. The keynote speaker was the Mayor of the City of Charleston.

It is this grass roots initiative of 1937 that the organizers of the current day “Feast of the Ramson” point to with pride. The modern day event has added heritage crafts and mountain-style music, but the star of the show has, and always will remain, that delicious mountain delicacy with a mystique all its own; THE RAMP.
